Seventh-day Adventists Reach Mission Goal For 1955

The Appomattox and Guinea Mills Seventh-day Adventist Churches have reached their entire 1955 goal for missions in this year's annual public appeal program, Pastor William Carey reported here today.

More than eeiven hundred dollars were contributed in the four and one-half counties comprising this district to assist in the church's world-wide missions program. Funds solicited will help in the medical, educational, and welfare program both at home and abroad.

Elder Carey states that the local congregations voted last week an expression of thanks and gratitude to the community for "Their wholehearted support of this annual program."

The local solicitation is part of a four-million dollar goal set by the General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists for its world field. Adventists have been conducting this program for more than 50 years.

To Dye The Rug

An application of hot dye will make it possible to renew the surface of an old rug, says Miss Ruth Jamison, house furnishings specialist at VPI.

For best results, select a medium shade of the dominating background color of the rug. If the rug is patterned, the application of dye will not cover the pattern, but the two will blend into a more pleasing effect. A neutral color may be dyed one of the warm, popular colors in a medium shade.

Dissolve three packages of the color chosen in 1½ gallons of boiling water. Boil five minutes to be sure all the dye has been dissolved. Add one cup of salt and stir until dissolved. Use only one-half the solution at one time, keeping the other half hot. Protect the floor with newspapers and brush dye on with a paint or scrub brush. Brush with the pile. If a hard surface, such as a porch floor, can be used, the dyeing can be done more quickly with a hose. Apply the dye just as hot as possible. A second coat of hot dye will give better results. At least 24 hours should elapse between applications.

After you get the color you want, go over the damp rug with a medium hot iron to help set the color. Then go over the rug with a damp cloth to remove any loose dye, and to prevent the color from cracking.

Upholstery can also be dyed by this method.

About six hours later, go over the surface with a stiff broom and brush the pile in the opposite direction. It will then finish drying in an erect position, which gives a velvety richness to the color. After the rug is dyed it usually needs to be re-sized. Cotton woven, braided and crocheted rugs can be dyed easily in the washing machine.

Make Cut Flowers Last Longer

Research has disproved the idea that flowers cut in early morning will last longer, report home economists at VPI.

They explain more nutrients are retained in flowers cut in the late afternoon. Nutrients are necessary for a long life of a cut stem. These nutrients are used up rapidly at night when plants make their fastest growth.

Plunge the flowers after cutting into warm water until they freshen up, then into cold water until you are ready to arrange them.

OAKVILLE 4-H CLUB

The Oakville 4-H Club held its monthly meeting on May 10. The vice-presidentis called the meeting to order and the secretary read the minutes of the last meeting. The club discussed what they wanted for a project next year. Mrs. B. G. Anderson had made for the members a 4-H leaf to wear on 4-H Sunday, which is the 15th.

American Cancer Society statistics show that more than 600 Americans die of cancer each day.

CLOVER HILL CLUB MEETS

The Clover Hill Home Deomnstration Club met on Tuesday afternoon, May 10, in the home of Mrs. Christine Whitehead, with Mrs. Whitehead and Mrs. Jessie Carwile as joint hostesses.

The meeting was called to order by the president and a devotional followed. Ten members answered the roll call.

Mrs. B. G. Anderson gave a report on the District III Federation meeting at Halifax April 27, and also gave a demonstration on "Finishes for Clothing." She urged the club to send at least two delegates to the Institute of Rural Affairs at Blacksburg July 25-28.

Mrs. T. M. Richardson, a member of the Federation Goal Committee gave a brief talk on the ten-year record of the United Nations. Mrs. Richardson stressed the fact that although much remains to be done in perfecting this organization, its successes far outweigh its failures. Quoting from a recent magazine article by Maude White Hardie, the speaker said, "The United Nations is not world government in disguise. No member district surrenders its sovereign rights on any issue, except by the will of its own people. The United Nations was not created by the Soviet powers. The United Nations cannot declare war. It can determine aggression and identify the aggressor.—The United Nations has no army and no power to dispose of any nation's armed forces. The United Nations is not extravagantly expensive and the United States is not paying the whole cost. The United Nations is an international organization and not a supranational authority. It is an instrument to achieve the common will of its members. As the world changes for better or for worse so will the United Nations."

Mrs. Richardson closed her talk by advising each one to read the papers and keep informed on current events so that when adverse criticism is heard one will know how to answer.

A social hour was enjoyed after the business session during which a "white elephant auction sale was held. The proceeds of this sale, which amounted to five dollars, was donated to the Christian Memorial Fund.

Refreshments were served, after which the meeting adjourned.

The plot unfolds, and it appears that Joe had once been Slade's boss but lost out by drink. Listen to Joe: "You know, Simon Slade, that my father owned the mill, where as boys we worked together." Dark days had come upon Joe's family. Soon after Little Mary makes her dramatic appearance and leads old Joe home. Soon Joe is broke and pleads for a drink again at the bar and Slade gets mad and throws a heavy glass at him, and—pour the tears— Joe dodges and the glass hits Little Mary, who had returned to the bar to try again to get her father to come home. The flying glass catches her squarely on the head. And then the scene shifts to the poor Morgan home. Joe promises the injured daughter that he will stay home with her, but the tremens cry out, "My brain is on fire." And Joe sleeps it off. But not Little Mary. The dying girl speaks her fabulous exhortion: "Yes, mother, your Little Mary has lived long enough. The angels have heard Little Mary's prayers. Father won't want anyone to follow him now, for he will be good . . . and sometime we will all be together." Then she quotes the words of a hymn: "We shall meet in that land where spring is eternal. . . ," And so she dies, and Joe Morgan falls sobbing on the couch. And he never touches the stuff again. His enemies lose out, and Joe becomes a respected citizen again. Slade, himself, becomes a sot, and loses his property. And virtue, as it should, triumphs, and everyone leaves with tears pouring and, it has been an experience: to see the classic and the tear-jerker which has scored a hit as an all-time great in our national life.

We liked our drama that way in the days of yesteryear.

Buying Power of The Dollar is Stabilized

Spearheading their efforts with a high rate of personal saving and record production, the American people have scored an outstanding success in their drive to restore stability to the dollar's buying power, after a decade of erosion.

The figures show that the Consumer Price Index compiled monthly by the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, popularly known as the cost of living index, has varied only around 2 per cent between its high and low points for more than three years—from the end of 1951 to date. This is an unusually narrow range for so long a period of time. Price records of the past going back to the early part of the last century produce few parallels of such stability in the consumer's dollar for any comparable period.

Stability does not mean rigidity in a free society. Individual components of the cost of living index have shown independent movements since 1952, as they have before and undoubtedly always will. Some, like housing and medical care have continued to go up. However, others like food and apparel have declined enough so that the net effect of the 1952-55 changes in living costs on the consumer pocketbook and family budget has been unusually small.

The significance of this development cannot be overestimated in view of the importance of sound money to the American saver and their family protection program, and for millions who are now living on pensions and other fixed incomes.

The current trend of the dollar also strengthens the hope that the fourth inflationary period in the 165-year history of the Republic may have run its course. And it should encourage the people to take whatever steps are necessary, such as ending the chronic deficits in the Federal budget, so that the dollar will have the same stable buying power in the foreseeable future as it has today. It is an opportunity, and a challenge.

The American people have shown an extraordinary proficiency over the years in solving the problems of technology and production, and in unlocking the secrets of nature. These have been translated into improving our material well-being and in providing the population with more and more of the better things of life. Our success in this respect has been phenomenal, but it would have been even more so had the purchasing power of the dollar been maintained on a basis of stability comparable with the last three years.

As it is the dollar's buying power today is down to around 52 cents compared with what it was in 1939 as the result of the inflation in the intervening period. The dollar currently will buy less than a third of what it would at the turn of the century, according to the records. The fact that the earning power of the average person, and his real living standards, have increased even more than living costs in the period does tend to conceal where the impact of inflation has been.

Barring another war or a boom-bust, around which the inflations and deflations of the past have revolved, the American people now have two powerful forces working on the side of sound money and the stable purchasing power of the dollar. One is mass thrift. The other is our unsurgassed capacity and ability to produce.

Today we are a nation of savers. There are 93 million owners of life insurance, or well over half the entire population. Approximately 70 million persons have savings accounts, and there are an estimated 16 million members of investors in savings and loan associations. These figures overlap in many cases, but they show the extent that thrift has permeated the nation and point up the importance of a stable price structure. Total accumulated savings of individuals in life insurance and other long-term thrift mediums now add up to around $220 billions, the equivalent of more than $5,000 for every family in the land. Here is one of the great stakes of sound money.

With $213 billions invested in new plant and equipment between 1945 and 1954, and expected to grow by another $27 billions this year, the nation's production mechanism is at its peak in potential volume and efficiency. A large part of the funds for this expansion came from the savings of the people.
